

CLOSING THE GENDER PLEASURE GAP!

MORE than 90 percent of men climax during sex compared to just 64 percent of women, new research shows. The difference stems from misunderstanding how female pleasure differs from male enjoyment, said University of Florida psychology professor Dr. Laurie Mintz, author of "Becoming Cliterate." To close the gap, she recommends teaching about clitoral stimulation in school sex ed classes. "Eighty percent of women need clitoral stimulation in order to orgasm," said Alexandra Fine, CEO of Dame Products, a new sex toy brand.
